

Winter Interest Gardening

Most often gardens are designed and planted during warm months when creative juices are flowing and inspiration comes from local nurseries and garden centers displays. There is one important aspect of the garden that is left out because of this. What is it going to look like in winter. Though you may not be outside much in the winter to enjoy your garden, you will however gaze upon it frequently from the window waiting for spring and all that sprouts. So why not incorporate plants that peak your interest during those months. Some plants have even more appeal without their foliage, such as the twisted shape of the Harry Lauder Walking Stick (Corylus a. contorta) or the bright stems of Red or Yellow Twig Dogwoods (Cornus sericea) and the Coral Bark Maple (Acer palmatum Sango Kaku). There are also a handful of plants that flower during winter months. Heath and Hellebores have evergreen foliage and are available in a variety of flowering colors. There are many other options to investigate including Witchhazel, Winterberry, conifers & grasses (which most grasses should not be cut back until mid-March). If your landscape is looking bare this time of year check out a few of these varieties and they will surely draw you outside on a sunny winter day.

New for Spring 2010

Every year we add new material to our nursery stock and making the decision of what to bring in is tough as there are hundreds of new cultivars created annually. Our perennial department has chosen about fifty new varieties that will be available in spring. Above are just four that we would like to highlight as we are sure they are going to be a hit. From left to right we will have Stokesia l. Silver Moon, Echinacea 'Big Sky' Crazy Pink, Euphorbia First Blush & Heuchera x villosa Miracle. For the latest in new plant introductions Colesville Nursery is a destination.

Cultivating plants for a greener peace of mind.
